

Historical Fiction

A novel or story is historical fiction if it takes place 50 years or more before present day. The author describes people, places, events or objects from the 1960's. The combination of history and fiction shows that this novel is historical fiction. Fill in the red Historical column with proof from the novel that shows it is historical. Fill in the purple Fiction column with proof that shows it is fiction.

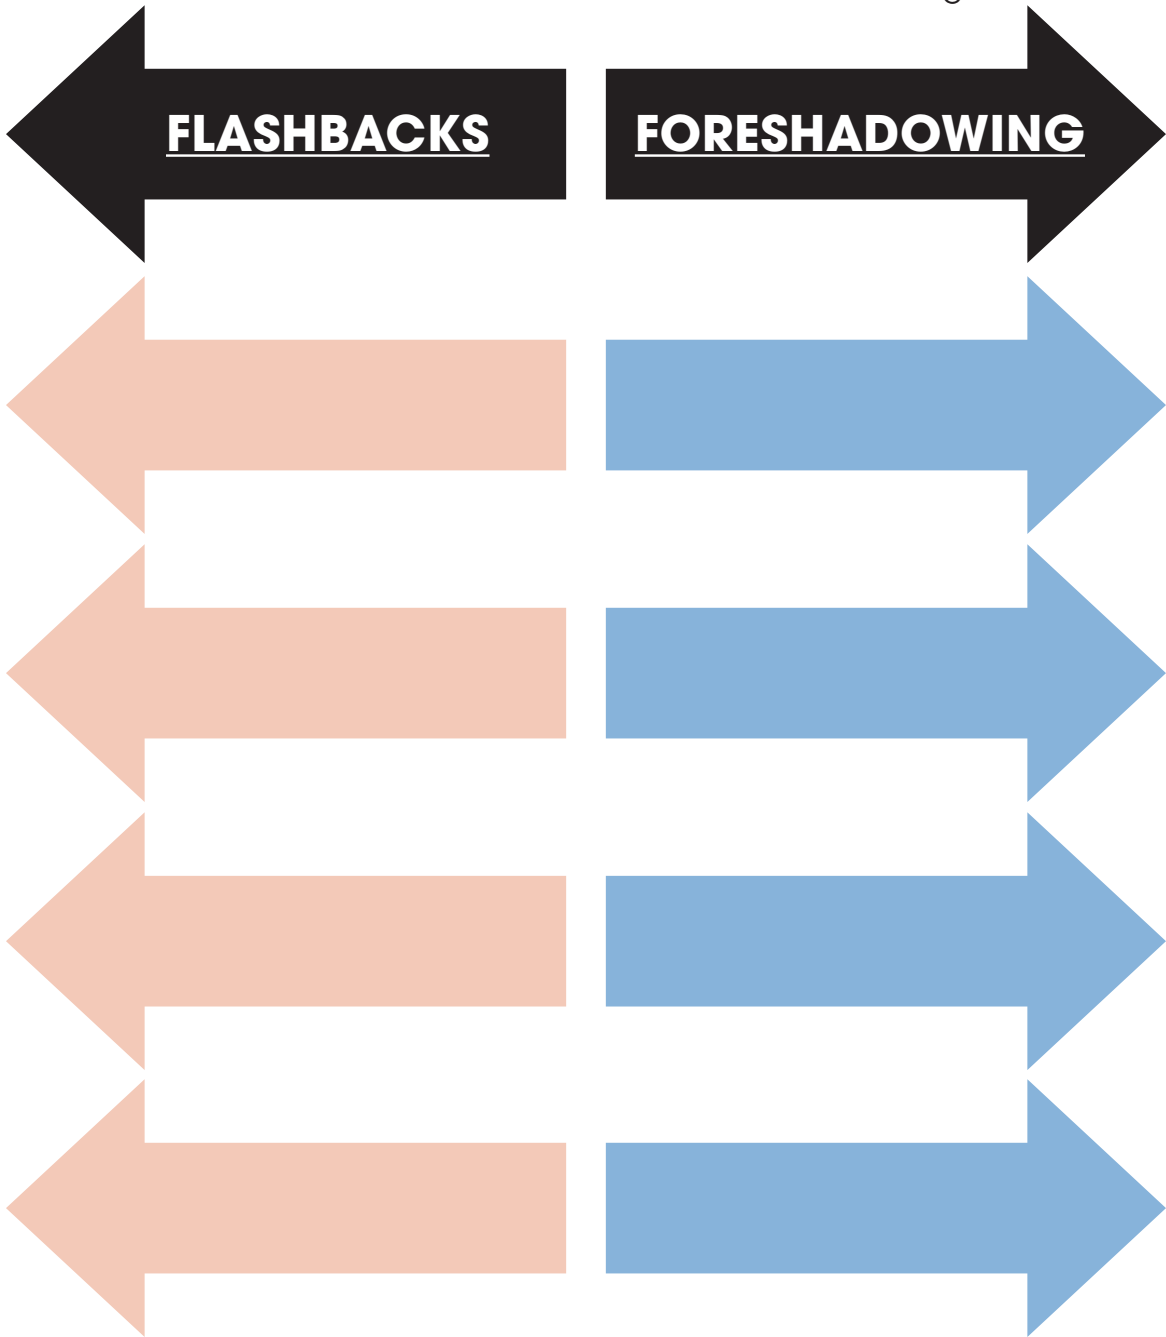

Historical: Real people, events, places, or objects.

Fiction: Author's imagined people, events, places or objects.

Flashbacks and Foreshadowing

Flashbacks are memories a character has. Foreshadowing are hints of something happening in the future. An author may use both in their story. Look for both as you read One Crazy Summer. The red arrows are for Delphine's flashbacks. The blue arrows are for foreshadowing.

Not Strangers Anymore

The Gaither sisters are surrounded by strangers in Oakland, California. This includes their mother. By the end of their 28 days with Cecile, many of these strangers really are not strangers anymore. Pick one of the sisters. Pick one other character from the novel. This should be someone who starts out as a stranger. Describe how the two interact through the book. Make note of any conflicts. Determine the point or event at which they become friends. Note: Even friends may have conflicts.
