The Rise of Capitalism in the Late 19th Century and Following the Great Depression

Capitalism is an economic system where businesses can be owned by private citizens.

Many people believe that when people own their business, there is more competition because people will be more interested in making more money.

Capitalism is one of the oldest economic systems in the world. During the late 19th century, many changes occurred in business that changed capitalism forever. The first change was the creation of large monopolies. Before this time, businesses were small, but technology and other changes allowed companies to grow bigger.

Another change was that the people who owned and managed the businesses were no longer involved in the daily production of the companies. In fact, some owners never set foot in the companies they managed.

Because companies wanted to get bigger, they started selling company stock in order to have more cash on hand. Regular people started buying this stock, and banking became more developed as a result. In fact, buying stock became a very popular habit because people had more money to spend than they had in the past.
