NAME:

International Languages

ith globalization comes the need to communicate across diverse parts of the world. In the days of the Colonial Empire, European languages such as English, French, and Spanish spread to the colonies and became official languages of government, business, and trade. Governments and trade organizations in other regions of the world also spread official languages, such as Mandarin Chinese. The United Nations conducts business in six official languages: Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Russian, and Spanish. Many children learn one or more of these international languages in schools in order to effectively communicate in the world. Mandarin Chinese is spoken by the greatest number of people in the world. French and English are among the most widely spoken languages geographically

Preservation of Mother Languages

What language is spoken by the greatest number of people in the world?

As the spread of English and other international languages became common in the last century, languages spoken in smaller regions or by smaller groups were less likely to be handed down from generation to generation. Some languages have even gone extinct, with no speakers of the language alive today. International efforts have grown to preserve the world's languages, which number over 900! These languages are documented by the organization Ethnologue www.ethnologue.com. Languages learned at home, passed down through families and communities, are sometimes called mother languages. International Mother Languages Day is celebrated every year on February 2

Hands-On Activity # 3

Be a Conscious World Travel Agent

Plan international vacations for people that maximize the positive impacts and minimize the negative impacts of tourist activity on indigenous and local populations.

First, use the library and internet resources to research destinations that would be fun for tourists and beneficial for local peoples, cultures, and economies. Find out about:

- How different tourist activities impact local and indigenous people and local economies. Popular activities include visiting beaches, wildlife areas, and historical sites;
- How tourists can move from place to place with the least pollution or disruption to locals;
- What resources tourists will need, and where they can get these resources without affecting local people's ability to use the resources;
- How tourists' waste can be managed without polluting the local
- How local and indigenous people can be supported by tourist activities, for example, by selling crafts or tickets to performances.

Then, plan a tour package. Include

- Several destinations;

- How tourists will travel to different destinations on the tour;
 Where tourists will eat and sleep;
 What sites tourists will see and what activities they will participate in.

Finally, design a brochure to advertise your conscious travel tours. Your brochure should:

- Provide all necessary information about the tour package, including destinations, activities, and accommodations;
- Be interesting for people who want to travel internationally;
- Explain why your tours are more globally conscious, helping rather than harming local and indigenous people, their environment, and their

Research

4. Find out more about your family's mother languages, Interview family members and use the library and internet resources to find out more about the languages spoken by previous generations of your family. You may wish to create a family tree with languages listed beneath each person. Choose one or more of your family's mother languages, and research the following:

- The historical roots of the language;
- The geographical areas in which the language was spoken;
- How to say basic greetings in the language;
- How many speakers of the languages still exist today.

Using this information, create a poster showcasing your language. Hold a celebration of International Mother Languages Day in your classroom (you do not need to wait until February 21). During the celebration, display the posters and learn how to greet one another in each of the languages.
